Scavolini

Another kitchen brand drawing inspiration from the concept of open-plan living is Italian company Scavolini, which has teamed up with French design guru Ora-ïto to create a new modular kitchen called Foodshelf. The design explores the redefined relationship between the kitchen and the living room. Here, there is no divide between kitchen and living room furniture to create fluidity between the two spaces. Prices start at £18,000.

Bisazza

The latest collaborator to work with Italian tile company Bisazza on its Cementiles collection is Britain's own Tom Dixon who has developed a range of 12 graphic patterns inspired by the fabric of London's architecture, from red bricks to cracked pavements and pebble dash. The new collaboration coincides with the 10-year anniversary of Bisazza's London showroom. Pictured here is Skew, a pattern that features a 3D interpretation of a red London brick. Priced at £175.50 per sq m.
